Hi, I'm Maxim Oliver,

an associate director in KPMG Climate Risk and Decarbonization Strategy Team in London. My previous career is in the consulting in the banking sector. And after taking a sabbatical, I wanted to come back to the world had a positive impact on the planet.

When I joined the team, we're about 15 people and we're now over 40 and going to be 60 by the end of the year. This really demonstrates the commitment from KPMG leadership on ESG and climate and the importance it's going to play in the future of the firm.

I focused on work with our banking clients, and this includes helping banks integrate climate risk considerations into their strategy, governance and overall business model, but also helping banks think about how they can set net zero targets and set transition plans to achieve these net zero targets.

It's really interesting work, the landscape ever evolving, and there's always something new to discuss with clients. So if you're looking for a great role in a team that has a great impact on society, then come join us on KPMG.
